Synopsis. Dans le Dorset rural de la période victorienne, le pasteur Tringham, un historien local, déclare à un paysan de la région, John Durbeyfield, qu'il a découvert lors de ses recherches que les Durbeyfields descendaient des D'Urberville, une famille de haut lignage qui datait de l'époque de Guillaume le Conquérant. Although Blake was a unique talent of his time, his poetry also reflects the world view and background from which he came. In stanzas 1-3 the poem's speaker addresses a 'knight at arms' who is alone and in a poor physical state, asking him what has happened that has caused him to look 'so haggard and so woe-begone'.
